TUCK'S POST CARD

CARTE POSTALE. POSTKARTE.

By Appointment.

Staple Inn. One of the old Inns of Chancery, deriving its name from the wool-staplers to whom it belonged. Here Dr. Johnson lived for a time, and here, to defray the expenses of his mother's funeral, he wrote in the evenings of one week his "Rasselas." Dickens speaks in "Edwin Drood" of the contrast in the quietude of these "nooks in turnings out of the clashing streets," and Hawthorne says:—"There is not a quieter spot in England than this. In all the centuries since London began, it has not been able to sweep its roaring tide over this little island of quiet."
